The City of London's tallest skyscraper to host London's newest Christmas market

For the first time The Leadenhall Building - better known as The Cheesegrater - will host a Christmas market for those feeling festive in the City of London.

The brand new market will be located in the 28m high open atrium at the foot of The Cheesegrater until the 22 December.

The market will feature seventeen German-style wooden chalets, decorated with twinkling fairy lights and sprigs of holly to brighten up the Square Mile. Visitors can feast on tempting treats such as Punjabi street food to French macarons, exotic homemade burgers and German chocolate kisses. There will also be a selection of handmade goods and crafts, with Indian shawls and Turkish ceramics on offer alongside the traditional Christmas jumper.
